The meeting opened at 10:31 a.m.

The following change in the minutes was requested: Under HEDS update (paragraph one), sentence reading: Committee members asked about tracking response by office or division, but this is not possible since the survey is anonymous. Change to: Committee members asked about tracking response by office or division, but this is not possible since HEDS identifies all responses. This change was accepted, and the minutes were approved as amended.

President Glotzbach acknowledged the Monday, February 25 announcement of his retirement at the end of the 2019–20 academic year, and he expressed his appreciation for the many kind responses he has received. He said that the timeline for the announcement was driven by his desire to provide the necessary time for the Board of Trustees to begin the search process. He emphasized that he and Marie Glotzbach will remain actively involved in all aspects of College business through June 2020.

Joshua Woodfork, Vice President for Strategic Planning and Institutional Diversity, reported that the Board of Trustees determines the search process, including the presidential search committee, which will consist of students, staff, faculty, and trustee members [16 members: eight Board members, four faculty, two staff, and two students]. The presidential search committee will make recommendations to the full Board of Trustees, and the Board will act as the hiring authority. On Tuesday, March 5, the Board Chair, Scott McGraw, will communicate this information to the community via email. Three willingness-to-serve calls (students, staff, and faculty) have been shared with IPPC, which reviewed a broad overview of the process. Staff, as an example, will work with the new Chief Human Resources Officer Brett Last and the leader of the Staff Advisory Group to solicit nominations and then votes from staff members.

Student Government Association (SGA)

Lisa Hobbs, Associate Director of Operations, Off-Campus Study and Exchanges, noted that the faculty willingness-to-serve notices have been issued, and that a reminder was sent today, with a reply deadline of Monday, March 4.

Joshua Woodfork stated that if, as it appears, all nominations will be ready by March 8, Board Coordinator Susan Koppi will forward the names to the Board of Trustees for ratification during the week of March 11 (Spring break week), with the first search committee meeting anticipated to take place soon thereafter (by April 1). He added that the Board has made it clear that there will be multiple ways for the campus community to participate or provide feedback, and in response to a question, that the Board will ask the search committee to determine if this is to be an “open” or “closed” (sometimes called “confidential” or “non-confidential”) search; President Glotzbach noted that this factor affects how the committee will handle the final candidates and would influence the composition of the applicant pool.

President Glotzbach reported that the Board of Trustees had a very good meeting on February 20–22 and that the Board was highly engaged. There was a welcome dinner on Wednesday with the Board and approximately thirty faculty, followed by a dance performance, for which he thanked Professor and Chair of Dance Deborah Fernandez and the student dancers who performed. The Board reviewed progress on the Campaign, and discussed leveraging Board contacts with family foundations as potential funding sources. The Strategic Planning Committee reviewed the College Dashboard and the Strategic Action Agenda, and the Board met with search firm Storbeck/Pimentel & Associates, which was a Board members-only session.

Faculty's Office are now working on design. President Glotzbach said that he would provide an update at the Faculty meeting later today, and at the two Community meetings on Tuesday, March 5.

Donna Ng reviewed discussion points for drafting a charge from IPPC to the IPPC Subcommittee on Budget and Finance related the Healthcare budget expense. She began the discussion with a review of the Subcommittee membership, explaining that Chief Technology Officer Bill a a i knowing what all the options are. The major issue will probably be employee share, and we will have to prepare people to engage in that discussion.

Q: In theory, could we take money from some other place and use it for this?

A (Ng): Health and retirement are the two largest benefit expenses; therefore, if we decide not to make changes to health the savings would probably need to come from retirement. There is no other benefit pot large enough to cover that expense.

Q: But is it possible to move money from some other part of the college budget? Is that on the table?

A (President Glotzbach): Everything is on the table, but other demands are going to be there.

A: (Ng): We do need to look at other things, but our challenges in the future are bigger than just health. Maybe we will decide later to do it another way, but without information, we can't make decisions. Right now, we really have no idea what the options/dollar savings, pros and cons will be. We need to do the work to figure out what the savings will be, and then decide. But the goal is to reduce health insurance costs: we must be clear about that.

Q: We have five meetings left till the end of the term; is that enough?

A (Ng): When I know what the charge is, I would be better able to answer that question.

VP Ng stated that the subcommittee is not a decision-making body but will advise IPPC on the best way to explore options and measure pros and cons.

President Glotzbach then asked the committee to work in small groups for ten minutes and list the major questions and points towards drafting the IPPC charge. The committee broke into small groups for discussion and produced the following points:

- Compare our available coverage vs. other employers in the area;
- set rough deadlines so the community has time for input and to make decisions before open enrollment;
- convey who is making the decisions; that is not clear right now;
- ensure diversity in the subcommittee's membership; maybe additional members are needed for fair representation;
- educate the community via comparison with what other schools offer, and U.S. healthcare benefits in general;
- where does the additional representation come from, and if there is none (no volunteers), how does the subcommittee's work go forward?

Also, larger questions and issues were raised such as:

- Do we cut retirement benefits in order to sustain healthcare?
- The working group should provide information necessary to make decisions.
- Should we add a member from Communication & Marketing?
- Does the subcommittee require additional members to do its work, or is it important to the community to make that opportunity available?

Committee members debated the desirability of adding additional members and considered the added value related to bringing in further perspectives. Vice President for Communications and Marketing Martin Mbugua suggested temporarily adding one more exempt and one more non-exempt staff member to the subcommittee for the healthcare benefit discussions. President Glotzbach called the question, and IPPC endorsed the idea of sending out a call for two additional members from staff. He asked that the administration draft the charge and share it soon with IPPC via email.

In response to a question, VP Ng noted that the subcommittee reports to IPPC and that IPPC advises the President and President's Cabinet. When the subcommittee brings a recommendation, it will be contextualized, and they will share all data and information with IPPC. It was agreed that the administration would draft an IPPC charge for the subcommittee and share it via email, asking member to weigh in over the coming days.

Joshua Woodfork noted that the next IPPC meeting is scheduled for March 22, and reminded committee members that there are other budget-related items that were discussed during the February half-day retreat that would likely return this Spring. President Glotzbach asked if the committee was willing to participate in another half-day retreat, if necessary. There was general agreement
